High School: Back to School Hacks

Are you ready for another school year?

High School is filled with a lot of adventures and challenges along the way. It may seem difficult for some, but at the end of the day, being able to experience it gives so much enjoyment and learning as well. For you to make the most out of the coming school year, here are some hacks you can use to make your High School life more convenient.

1. Most of us use black ink pens but according to copy writing professionals, it is easier to remember things when you write it in blue ink.

2. When you want to boost up your energy and endurance, it is advisable to run at the afternoon and have a quick run in the morning if you want to lose some weight.

3. If you have smelly P.E. shoes, try putting tea bags in your shoes overnight and in the next morning your shoes smells like nothing happened.

4. To remember the decimals in Pi (π), just count the letters in every word in the sentence:

“May I have a large container of coffee”

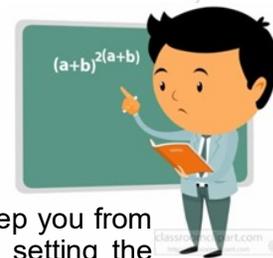

3.1415 9 26

5. If you run-out of deodorant, try to use a hand sanitizer in your underarm. It has the same effect as deodorants in killing bacteria which creates foul smell.

6. Assemble an emergency kit. The emergency kit shall contain feminine necessities, band aid, alcohol, and other things which you think is necessary for your needs.

7. In a presentation, try to change the pen colour of every line when using cue cards. By this it would be easier for you to read and lessen the nervousness you feel at the moment.

8. Keepmeout.com will keep you out from delaying your work. It will keep you from browsing thru social websites like Facebook and YouTube by just setting the hours you want to keep your self-focused on studying.

9. Google.com has been our saviour and our bestfriend all through these years but didn't you know that there is a more reliable source of information? For the students you can use scholar.google.com. For academic needs, this is the site you can turn to.

10. Do you know the Promodoro Technique?

Work for 25 minutes, then a 5 minute break. After doing this 4 times, take a longer 30 minute break. This is guaranteed to drastically boost your productivity.

High School gives you one of the most memorable memories, it is the time you mature and start to decide for yourself and if you're lucky, you'll meet your bestfriend along the way. So enjoy these moments and hack away! //Ana Chemelyn P. Naz

How to Ace a Job Interview

Everyone has experienced being in a job interview. It gives employers the chance to meet and get to know an individual who is applying for a certain job position.

This experience may be nerve-racking to most that's why it is one of the most challenging components of job application.

To help you put your best foot forward during this process, below are some pointers that you can consider to help you ace a job interview:

- Know the essence of the job you're applying for. Get to know the job intimately that you're applying for. Don't just read the job description--study it and picture yourself performing every task required of you. In an interview, frame your responses so that you reveal your significant knowledge about the job which will give you a massive advantage.
- Know the company. No matter how prepared you are to talk about yourself, not knowing the essentials of the company conveys a lack of preparation and interest. You can't show an interviewer how you'll fit in the company until you know the company.
- Prepare a list of follow-up questions. Prepare a list of follow-up questions and outline key points you will touch on during interview. For example, if you say your biggest strength is time management, you need to be ready for the interviewer to ask something like, "What does this strength look like in action?" This preparation will make your responses more pointed, avoid awkward silences and uncertainty. It will also build your confidence prior to the interview.
- Practice, practice, practice. Preparing unique and position-specific responses will give you the competitive edge over everyone else. You don't need to memorize answers, but instead know certain points of reference about yourself that you can apply to different questions.
- Relax. Being yourself is essential to the selection process, and interviewers will feel it if you're too nervous. Showing fear or anxiety appears to be weak compared to a relaxed smile and genuine confidence. Numerous studies show that smiling will not only increase your happiness and confidence, but will also put the people you're interacting with at ease.
- Stay positive. It may seem obvious that maintaining positivity is essential in an interview, but it can be very difficult to do when discussing some topics. It's tough to be positive when describing difficult bosses or coworkers from your past, or explaining why you were fired from your previous job, but that's exactly what employers want to see in you. Show them that you can maintain a positive attitude about a challenging environment, and they'll see the resilient and flexible individual they're looking for.
- Be honest. Good interviewers have a way of getting to the crux of who you are. They may have an innate sense for reading people, or they might just be really good at asking the right questions. Regardless, it's essential to approach your interview with honesty.

In addition, we also have to work hard by beginning with acknowledging our skills, abilities, and other characteristics including our personality, values, goals, and purpose. Having and showcasing these during the interview will help you ace one of the most challenging components of job application and you just might land on your dream job.
